Abstract. In a scientific context such as ours, a true understanding of faith needs a correct approach to its relationship with science. Defending religious belief in the modern age dominated by scientific learning is the main preoccupation expressed by Pope Benedict XVI in some of his own speeches. Tackling this task means changing the nature of our ideas on both science and faith. The belief in God is compatible with science, only if we demarcate the limits of the scientific discourse. The idea that science is the framework for all kinds of cultural inquiry proves incorrect and represents a considerable risk for humanity. Moreover, a naturalist approach cannot respond to the exigency of finding a more profound meaning in natural reality.

Keywords: Ratzinger; science; faith; epistemology; metaphysics.

Introduction

In professional and popular culture it is not uncommon to consider atheism and science associated. On the contrary, a strict definition of scientific investigation shows the impossibility of a conflict between science and faith. This paper deals with Pope Benedict XVI's view on the relationship
